PROJECT DESCRIPTION: The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City District is proposing to modify the side channel at the Missouri River Recovery Program Tadpole Island project site. Tadpole Island is located along the right descending bank of the Missouri River in Moniteau County, Missouri. The side channel was constructed in 2006, but do to several flood events from 2007 to 2011 it threatened to impact Missouri River navigation. In 2012, rock was placed at the entrance of the side channel to restrict water flow and correct navigation issues. This project proposes to modify the side channel to improve connectivity with mainstem Missouri River while maintaining the navigation channel. A series of alternating dikes would be placed in the side channel to create meandering, which would lengthen and slow water velocities; allowing rock to be removed from the side channels entrance. The project would use both land and river based means of transport for construction.
